

For Immediate Release

Contact: Liam Kernell
Director of Communications, The Kohala Center
lkernell@kohalacenter.org
808-887-6411

FoodCorps recruitment begins Applications open for service positions as school food changemakers

KAMUELA, Hawai‘i—January 18, 2017—The national FoodCorps program is currently accepting applications from emerging food justice leaders for the 2017–2018 school year. Service member positions are available on Hawai‘i Island and O‘ahu, as well as in communities in 16 states in the continental U.S. and the District of Columbia.

The organization seeks up to 225 men and women with a passion for serving their communities, a commitment to social justice, and an interest in jump-starting their careers. More information about the program and applications are available online at <https://www.foodcorps.org/apply>. The deadline to apply is March 15.

FoodCorps connects children in limited-resource communities to healthy food in schools. Selected service members dedicate one year of full-time, paid public service in school food systems, teaching hands-on lessons in growing, cooking, and tasting food; collaborating with food service staff to steer students towards the healthiest options in the cafeteria; and working alongside school administrators and teachers to foster a school-wide culture of health. FoodCorps provides valuable skills and training to service members who go through the program, setting them up for careers in school food, public health, and education. Benefits of AmeriCorps service include an $18,250 stipend, health care, training, and a $5,815 education award.

The Kohala Center, a Hawai‘i Island-based nonprofit organization, has served as the state partner for the FoodCorps program in Hawai‘i since 2013, providing resources and professional development support to service members, teachers, and school administrators at 24 schools on Hawai‘i Island, Moloka‘i, and O‘ahu.

“The lessons I have learned, the people I have met, and the direction this work has given me continue to amaze me,” said Stephanie Loui, a second-year FoodCorps member serving at three elementary schools on O‘ahu’s north shore through the Kokua Hawai‘i Foundation. “When I finish FoodCorps, I will move on with experience in nonprofit programming, education, and

-more-

P.O. Box 437462 | Kamuela, Hawai‘i 96743 | Tel. 808-887-6411 | Fax 808-885-6707 | www.kohalacenter.org

The Kohala Center is an equal opportunity provider, employer, and lender.

FoodCorps recruitment begins, page 2

Contact: Liam Kernell
Director of Communications, The Kohala Center
lkernell@kohalacenter.org
808-887-6411

farming. I will have an education grant to help me pursue further learning if I choose. But most of all, I will have invaluable experience under my belt and a foundation from which to grow.”

FoodCorps partners with community organizations and schools to address the root cause of childhood obesity and diet-related diseases: a lack of access and connection to healthy food. In Hawai‘i roughly 85% of available food is imported from 2,300 miles away or more, and Pacific Islander children experience higher rates of diet-related diseases than their peers. Because America’s most vulnerable children consume a majority of their calories at school, FoodCorps seeks to improve children’s nutrition by expanding school garden programs; increasing procurement and consumption of fresh, locally grown food in schools; and conducting cooking lessons that incorporate fresh, healthy, and affordable ingredients.

In its first six years, FoodCorps has brought important progress to the schools it serves, demonstrating measurable change to children’s eating habits and helping the schools it partners with become healthier environments. Hundreds of its AmeriCorps service members have introduced new healthy recipes into cafeterias, built and taught in hundreds of school gardens from Hawai‘i to Maine, and engaged thousands of volunteers and parents in their efforts.

“What we feed our children in school—and what we teach them about food there—shapes their health and success over a lifetime,” said Curt Ellis, FoodCorps co-founder and chief executive officer. “By joining FoodCorps, service members have a chance to do something incredibly important: connect children in their communities to healthy food, and give them the opportunity to grow, learn, and thrive.”

About FoodCorps

FoodCorps (<http://www.foodcorps.org>) is a nationwide team of AmeriCorps leaders who connect kids to healthy food in school. FoodCorps places these leaders in limited-resource schools for a year of public service where they teach hands-on lessons in growing, cooking and tasting food, collaborate with food service staff to steer students towards the healthiest options in the cafeteria, and work alongside school administrators and teachers to foster a schoolwide culture of health.

About The Kohala Center

Founded in the year 2000, The Kohala Center (<http://www.kohalacenter.org>) is an independent, community-based center for research, conservation, and education. We turn research and ancestral knowledge into action, so that communities in Hawai‘i and around the world can thrive—ecologically, economically, culturally, and socially.

FoodCorps recruitment begins, page 3

Contact: Liam Kernell
Director of Communications, The Kohala Center
lkernell@kohalacenter.org
808-887-6411

[Photo_FoodCorps_Hawaii_2017-2018.jpg]

Students at Honaunau Elementary School on Hawai'i Island show off carrots grown in their school garden. The school was a FoodCorps service site during the program's first two years in Hawai'i. Photo courtesy FoodCorps.